The Moorefield Examiner publishes the following interesting story: For a good many years there has been talk of a silver mine being somewhere in the mountain back of the William Fisher farm. It is also said that the mine was found a long time ago by an old colored man named Gaiter. The master refused to do tills, so the old darkey nover told where the mine could be found. When the war set Gaiter free, be moved with his family to Mt. Pleasant, Pa. Old man Gaiter died some years ago, but before his death, told his son Henry where to find the mine. Henry has been back several times, we are told, and gotten silver from the mine and had it tested. It proved to be of the very best quality, and Henry has various things which he says is made of this aliver, For years people have searched for this silver mine, but have never been able to find it. However, a large body of land on Middle Mountain was purclassed by a company of gentlemen composed of S. A. McMechen, H. S. Carr and others. He regained consciousness during the night. Since then he has been in a critical condition, and the accident may terminate his life.

To correct a misapprehension it is hereby announced that the coming Kirmess is not a dog-fight.

One night last week some inhuman fiend entered the stable of Mr. A. B. Myles, who resides a few miles from Fayetteville, and cut the throat of one of his best herses—a valuable animal which was highly valued by him. There is no clue to the perpetrator of this atrocious deed; but if the guilty one could be apprehended, notwithstanding we are in favor of "law and order," we would heartily be in favor of serving him in the same manner in which he served this poor dumb brute.—Fayets Democrat.

Takes, as it were, the fabric in one hand, the dirt in the other, and lays them apart—com-paratively speaking, washing with little work. As it saves the worst of the work, so it saves the worst of the wear.
